Surrealist work. The first form is unpremeditated art that relies upon chance effects such as random mark-making and scraping - the type of work practiced by artists like Joan Miró (1893-1983). The second form is the creation of apparently irrational images that occurred to the mind, particularly in dreams, in a realistic style.

Realism has dominated the academic study of international relations since the end of World War II. Realists claim to offer both the most accurate explanation of state behaviour and a set of policy prescriptions (notably the balance of power between states) for ameliorating the inherent destabilizing elements of international affairs.

Theory and International Relations
discusses the challenge to realism
which proponents of international political economy and critical theory have mounted in the last few years. At the same time, it
emphasises the part
that realist themes
now play in the argument for a 'post-Marxist' critical
sociology.
