Augustine's Confessions is not an autobiography in the literal sense, but is rather an autobiographical framework for a religious, moral, theological, and philosophical text. Augustine explores the nature of God and sin within the context of a Christian man's life. The work can thus be viewed as both a discursive document and a subjective personal story.

Confessions Summary | GradeSaver

Throughout the collection "Confessions," St. Augustine attempts to inform others about the various enjoyments life has to offer. His big argument is that people can attain true happiness by accepting God into their lives, and refrain from participating in worldly pleasures. He believes that rejecting the Sometimes it is simply too late after a confession to back pedal. Law enforcement officers may honestly believe that the defendant is guilty because he or she has confessed and may look no further for the real perpetrator of the crime. There is no way of knowing how many people behind bars are really innocent even though they confessed to a crime.
